Frederic Remington "The American Classics"

FREDERIC REMINGTON (1861-1909) depicted the life of the cowboy during 1880's and 1890's better perhaps than any other artist of his time. He thought of himself as a true citizen of the American West.

A native of Canton, New York, Remington left college at the age of 19, looking for adventure in the West. Remington operated his own ranch in Kansas and in 1886 he gave it up as a failure and came back to the East. The experience served him well in his later career as an artist. "What success I have had", Remington once told a newspaper reporter, "has been because I have a horse-man's knowledge of a horse. No one can draw equestrian subjects unless he is an equestrian himself".

As an artist, Remington first made a name for himself as an illustrator and painter, and began sculpting only 14 years before his death in 1909. "I was impelled to try my hand at sculpture by a mental desire to say something in the round as well as in flat. Sculpture is the most perfect expression of action. You can say it all in clay". The first Remington in clay was "Bronco Buster", completed in 1885.

Among his admirers were Theodore Roosevelt, who once said that "Remington portrayed a most characteristic and yet vanishing type of American life. The soldier, the cowboy, the rancher, the Indian, the horses and cattle of the plains will live in his pictures and bronzes, I verily believe for all time".

A GREAT WESTERN CLASSIC

JAMES EARL FRASER was born in Winona Minnesota in 1876. In 1880 James and his family moved to the Dakota Territory where he began his love for the West.

At age 22, Fraser went to Paris to study under master sculptors. Working with his wife, Laura, they created many great works of art, many of which surmount "The End of the Trail". In 1953 Fraser died. Since his death he is regarded as America's foremost Western sculptor.

Charles Russell "The All American Cowboy"

CHARLES MARION RUSSELL was born on March 19, 1864 in Oakhill, Missouri, died in Great Falls, Montana in 1926. He was a self taught artist, drawing inspiration from his life experience as a cowboy. He specialized in western style life: cowboys, Indians, buffalo, bears, cougars, and his favorite - horses.

The viewer of Russell's bronzes share in his feelings of delight and despair, his moments of high excitement and those of quiet humor. The sculptor was blessed with an ability to see those critical details that give his works excitement of life. Some of his bronzes are more impressionistic than others. By 1914 he had established himself as a success, as a sculptor and painter.

Carl Kauba... Masterworks

CARL KAUBA was born in Vienna in 1865 and died in 1922. Although he signed "Carl", Kauba's birth certificate officially identifies him as "Karl" son of an Austrian shoemaker. He never visited America himself but was inspired by the romantic stories written by the German, Carl May and many photographers and illustrations which he had seen. Also inspired by the possessions of a complete Western saddle and other Indian artifacts that an American friend from Ohio sent as gifts.

In contrast to most artists, Kauba's success as a businessman was equal to his artistic achievements. He worked in a studio in his home and personally directed the casting of his clay models in local foundries.

CHARLES HUMPHRIES (or Humphriss) 1867-1934, was born in England and later settled in New York. He became a member of the National Association of Sculptors and won recognition of his peers. He also exhibited at the Academy of Fine Arts and at the Panama-Pacific Exposition where he won several awards. He saw the Indian as a man of peace, and not as a warrior. Although the theme of his work was influenced by the western way of life, he lived and exhibited his works in the East.

CYRUS EDWIN DALLIN (1861-1944) was born in Utah. Dallin was a student of Truman Bartlett in Boston, Massachusetts and Chapu and Dampit in Paris. His first clay models as a boy were of animals roaming the Utah wilderness. He exhibited in the U.S. and France, winning many gold medals at the expositions.

Strictly speaking this sculpture modeled the plight of the American Indian, but in doing so drew attention to the close relationship of the native American to animals, both wild and domestic.

PIERRE JULES MENE was born in Paris in 1810 and died there in 1871. Mene was the most successful and prolific animalier of his day. He was born into an apparently prosperous artisan family. Mene's father was a skilled metal tuner and was able to teach his son the basics of working a metal foundry and the principles of sculpture. He interpreted his own sketches into bronze casts by his own hand and rapidly established a reputation for himself.

Mene won four medals at the Salon and at major exhibitions, receiving the Cross of the Légion d'Honneur in 1861. He was influenced by the French painter Carle Vernet and the English painter Landseer. His bronzes inherited much of the warm, friendly style of romanticism but he soon developed his own style of naturalism. He became the most important and influenced animalier of his time.

JULES MOIGNIEZ (1835-1894) was of the French nationality. From 1859 to 1892 he displayed 30 animal groups in the Salon where he made his debut. Most of his sculptures were of game birds and hunting dogs.

Moigniez committed suicide after a long illness. After Moigniez's death his bronzes were cast by A. George. Most of them appeared at the 1862 Exposition in London, where the artist won a medal.

ISIDORE JULES BONHUEUR (1827-1901). One of a well known family of painters, he studied painting, moving on to sculpture in 1848. He exhibited until 1899, winning the coveted Gold Medal at the Universal Exhibition in Paris. Somewhat overshadowed by his older sister Rosa, Isidore nevertheless was highly accomplished. He completed a memorial statue to his sister in Fontainbleau during the last two years of his life.

Bonheur's studies range from farm animals to bears and tigers, to equestrian groups in a very natural and realistic quality. He was inspired possibly by his many visits to the Buffalo Bill Wild West Show.

ANTOINE LOUIS BARYE (1796-1875) was born in Paris on September 24, 1796, as the son of a goldsmith he worked as an apprentice to a metal engraver until he was drafted into the military in 1812. Following the war he studied with the Classical sculptor Bosio. From 1818 to 1823 he attended The Ecole des Beaux Arts in Paris, winning a second prize in 1819. In 1832 he established his own studio. In 1848 he became director of a plaster casting establishment in Louvre and in 1854 he was master of zoological drawing in the Musée d' Histoire Naturelle where one of his pupils was Rodin.

Barye was the classic case of the artist's struggle for recognition; his talent was too advanced to be appreciated by most until the late 1830's. He was the greatest animal sculptor of all time and is the father of the Animalier School.

YEVGENI ALEXANDROVICH LANCERAY was a Russian artist who was born in 1848 and died in 1886 in St. Petersburg. A major Russian sculptor whose work centered upon horses and their relationship with man as his working animals. He produced a wide range of works during his comparatively short career. Some of his more ambitious works of groups of five or seven horses or racing troikas, he always managed to convey a sense of realism in a traditional manner. All his carts were superbly executed with infinite attention to detail of faces and clothing. The signature is normally in Cyrillic. Many of this sculptor's models have been recast during the last twenty years.

JOHN WILLIS GOOD (1845-1879). Little is known about this English sculptor that was highly popular. His work was exhibited at the Royal Academy from 1870-78.

He concentrated throughout his short and prolific career in bronze and terra cotta. His bronzes are usually well finished and crisply modeled with a well defined script signature. The well known silver-smith and inventive silverplating firm Elking & Co. cast many of this sculptor's bronzes, especially around the year 1875.

Great Masterworks by Auguste Rodin

AUGUSTE RODIN was born in 1840 and died in 1917. In his time he was considered the greatest sculptor since Michelangelo. His style was both classic and romantic. Rodin followed nature closely and presented it exactly as he saw it. It was he who led the way in modern sculpture.

He never was awarded any national honors which was probably due to the fact that he lived during the years that his country was at war with Germany.

In 1967, during the 50th anniversary of Rodin's death, he was finally awarded with the public tribute to Preiss.

Art Deco

LOUIS JUSTIN ICART was born September 12, 1888 in France. His second wife, Fanny, as well as the city of Paris, which was the uncontested international center of beauty and art, were his inspiration for much of his work. During his forty year artistic career Icart delighted lovers of Art Deco, a fashion directed almost exclusively towards women on both sides of the Atlantic. Art Deco was a period of perfection of workmanship and this factor in Icart's work related him to the period.

Today this witty, joyful, and often poignant images of beautiful women of France have found a new generation of admirers.

DEMETRE H. CHIPARUS was born in Romania and then traveled to Paris before World War I to become more involved with his artwork. He exhibited at the Salon in 1914. He produced most of his renowned works between 1914 and 1933. His later works in the 1920's were influenced by his interest in Egypt, after the excavation of the Pharaoh Tutankhmen's tomb.

Some of his most exciting works are dancers taken from the Russian Ballet, French theatre and early motion pictures.

JOHANN PHILIPP FERINAND PREISS was born February 13, 1882 and died from a brain tumor in 1943. He studied in Paris and worked with Professor Poertyle in Berlin. Preiss worked to a great extent with ivory and bronze with magnificent results.

It has been established that Preiss designed and worked on all his models and had many sculptors work for him. Though he had sculptors work for him, he did assemble most all of his pieces.

PIERRE LEFAGUAYS was a prolific and versatile avant-garde French sculptor whose works greatly influenced the styles of the 1920's and early 1930's. His many male figures were super-powerful (a blend of primitive and futuristic man) and often brutal to the extreme. Yet, his dancing girls are delicate creatures and lovely, sensitive faces (in bronze and tinted ivory) equal to those of the better known specialists - Chiparus, Preiss and Lorenzl. Add to these a host of exciting child, biblical and sporting subjects.

JUAN CLARA was born in Olot, Spain in 1875. He exhibited at the Paris Salons. He obtained an honorable mention in 1903. He also exhibited at the Ecole des Beaux Arts in Paris.

EMMANUEL VILLANIS was an Italian born sculptor and one of the most prolific sculptors of the late Victorian, early Nouveau periods. His works are almost exclusively female subjects. His pieces are easily recognized by the artistic scrolling of the subjects name below her face. Also readily identifiable as Villanis are the perfect, ideally proportioned features of his women's faces he used a deep cut for the eyes - a technique that was in sharp contrast to other sculptors of the time who tried to reproduce the natural eyeball.

He received an honorable mention at the Exposition Universelle in Paris in 1889.

ETIENNE MAURICE FALCONET was born in Paris on December 1, 1716 and died January 24, 1791. In 1757 Falconet was appointed director of sculpture at the Seures Porcelain Manufacture. He produced approximately 30 major sculptures, but many were lost due to revolutionary vandalism. Many of his pieces were continuously reproduced in every medium, often even adapted to clocks and furniture. In 1766 Catherine the Great called him to St. Petersburg for his last and greatest commission. He was considered France's most versatile representative of the 18th century.
